

Corporate-Based Prostitution

Symbiotic life, whether male or female, is female/ male characterized. The individual person, in Trinitarian likeness, is a person “knowingly self-conscious” because of the genetic fusing of female/ male DNA from the moment the sperm becomes one with the ovum.

The prolixity of nature is an evolved complexity of life symbiotically differentiated. In all her richness, whether in physical or psychological disposition, life is a joined continuum of harmonic economy/ ecology, made holy intentionally in Eucharist, and destined to flourish in the mutuality of intentional personalities.

Neither the male sex nor the female can individually arrogate to himself or herself uniqueness or superiority except for the joined symbiosis of female/ male sexuality in every person. Life is honored when we acknowledge and celebrate without compromise her essential mutuality. Unfortunately, corporate psychology and physicality have through the years arrogated maleness exclusively in corporate politics and have dishonored the human person by exploiting the physiology and psychology of nature for corporate self-advantage and personal profiteering.

In his religious consciousness, the male persona has arrogated to himself presumptions of divinity and superiority over females; and to the self-advantage of elitist male corporatism has profited at the expense and diminishment of females.

Profiteering on the sexual favors of females has a name, and that name is “prostitution.” Religion and male corporate culture continue in gross and sophisticated ways the prostitution of female grace, spiritually and physically. Humankind personally and nature communally are wasted sacrilegiously by the culture of “corporate-based prostitution.”
